Navy Makes Combat Art
Available to Industry

The U.S. Navy’s collection of more than 3,000 original paintings, sketches and drawings, created in a wide variety of media and techniques, is available for reproduction as calendar sheets, magazine and poster advertisements, book jackets, desk mementos, and other advertising uses.

The combat art collection’s historical paintings range in subject area from World War I and II battle scenes to modern combat illustrations and impressionistic renderings of industrial and nautical facilities, people and places throughout the world. Some color separations are already available.

The collection is the property of the U.S. Navy and no releases from artists or payment of fees for reproduction rights are required. To obtain reproductions or further information on use of original art, write or call:
